

September 8, 2015

DÎNER EN BLANC

Andrew and I are the sort of folk that like to be surrounded by other folk – lost in the mayhem of companionship, family style chaos, that sort of off kilter mess of commotion and camaraderie that can only, definitively, be summed up as cozy. In the heart of downtown Washington, DC we found ourselves surrounded by not only some of our closest and newest friends, and over two thousand eager faces – in the midsts of DC's chapter of Diner en Blanc. Dressed in our whitest whites and toting a late summer inspired outfit of heirloom tomato salad, smoked beets, bruschetta, and berry crumble, we spontaneously gathered on the Carnegie Library's lawn. Whether you're toting yourself across town for an all white gathering or hosting your own intimate late summer soirée, be sure to head over to West Elm's Front + Main for the details on how we gussied up our night and table.

